Would I or Would I not pursue my Architecture License

Upon learning more about my future aspirations by way of the professional practice course here at City Tech, I have come to the conclusion that while primarily I will not pursue my license, I will if however in the future see the opportunity to do so, I will. Even now i still toil with the decision, but I feel that I can't make the call until I garner more experience in the field through internships and various job roles. One thing that I am certain about is my aspirations of becoming an urban designer and being involved with schematic design. I have learned that neither of these require me to have an architect license which leads me to feel that I will not pursue one. However having one would grant me the title of architect which holds meaning with me. Especially when considering that being an architect is a dream that I have had since my childhood. The amount of money that I can make in the roles that I am interested in will also help influence my decision, so overall it is to early to make the call on whether or not I will pursue my license.
