

Archive Reflection #3

By: Jesus Mendoza

On Wednesday November 30th we went on a trip to visit the Interference Archive located in Gowanus Brooklyn. To be honest before this day I do not think I had ever stepped foot into Gowanus nor did I know that they were so intrigued by art. The archive is located in loft like building and is home to many special items ranging from informative pamphlets and books all the way to buttons and historical photos. We got a chance to speak to Mike Clemow, host and creator of Radio Free Gowanus. One of the surprising things he told us was that he only makes one podcast a year because it takes a massive amount of time to prepare for it. I was so astonished and thought to myself how hard will this project actually be. Overall though it was a very informative trip. I never knew you could purchase your own FM antenna. I also think it cool how Mike had an idea and just ran with it. Good for him.

Questions for further research:

- 1. What range do different antennas have?
- 2. How can you get permission to operate your own radio station?
