Weekly Journal #1

So during the past two weeks starting from February 25th, I ordered my tripod and successfully set up my camcorder. It was a very easy process and as soon as I figured that out I began filming. So on February 25th, I decided to film my intro after successfully writing the script for it. I also managed to film my conclusion on the same day. It took a couple of takes but I was able to do it and deliver the words the way I wanted to. Next week, I was able to film the third point that's a part of my body paragraphs for the script. I essentially took a lot of shots where I'm walking around my neighborhood, and soon after I'll incorporate a voice over on Audition where I'll say how walking has provided clarity for my mental health. Throughout these shots, I was able to modify my scripts and resources after the constructive feedback I've gotten from the staff that watched my presentation. It's overall a tricky experience but I'm having as much fun as I can with this project which is the most important thing.
