

University at Buffalo

School of Architecture and Planning

Thinking about Graduate School?

Which graduate program is right for me?

Learn from current graduate students and faculty about choosing the right program and how to get started on applying to graduate school.

About the School

The University at Buffalo School of Architecture and Planning is part of the 64-campus State University of New York (SUNY) system. Embedded in our urban context in Buffalo and around the world, we are guided by a culture of experimentation, a core belief in learning by doing, and a spirit of public service and inclusion. Our pursuit of research as core curriculum is situated with a broad inter-disciplinary approach that reaches across the University at Buffalo, a flagship of SUNY one of 34 public research universities in the prestigious Association of American Universities. Together we prove that design and planning are agents of change for community, place, culture, social justice and the natural world.

Our Graduate Degrees

- PhD in Urban and Regional Planning
- Master of Architecture
- Master of Urban Planning
- Master of Science in Real Estate Development
- Master of Science in International Development and Global Health
- Master of Science in Architecture
- Advanced Graduate Certificate in Affordable Housing
- Advanced Graduate Certificate in Historic Preservation
- Multiple opportunities to pursue dual and collaborative degree programs

Questions?

Contact:

Kevin Donovan
Director of Graduate Recruitment
KPD2@buffalo.edu
(716) 829-5224

"The things I learned at UB were essential to the job I do now. But even more important to me were the relationships I cultivated there."

Lisa Hicks (MS in Real Estate Development '17)

Director of Development, City of Buffalo, Office of Strategic Planning