Dear Professor Belli,

I've have learned, throughout my doing of this project, that it's hard to work on a project for one teacher and complete several essays and study for exams for other teachers who expect their work. In relation to my topic and research, I've learned that the Mayans had Priests that studied astronomy for the sake of "predicting the future" among other things. The Mayans are pretty advance in this kind of stuff. I also learned about several key words such as "nebula", "constellation", and "astronomy. Due to work that I had to do for other classes, I was unable to do the first draft at the same time of several of my other classmates. However, I was able to catch up and do my first draft at the same time as everyone was doing their second draft. Though having my other classmates go over my work and doing the presentation was somewhat helpful, what was the most helpful was having you read over the work and give advice for improvement. The main struggle had during the project was getting things together and handed in on time for show. If not the timing, the stress of getting everything done both for your class and other classes has made this more difficult than necessary.
