Dear Mr. Worthington:

A friend of mine, George Hunzel, suggested I apply for one of your recent job openings. I been worked in various businesses—ranging from grocery clerk to gas station attendant. Also, I have read several books like “War of the Worlds,” which has great special effects.

I’m looking for a position with a good company, as my current employer is a jerk and complains about every little thing like when a person don’t get to work exactly on time. I believe if a manager wants to be effective, they have to act nice to workers. So I’m looking to move to a better situation where the company manager isn’t so unreasonable. Your company Culchure Unlimited sounds like the place for me considering your leasure thing and all. Please take a look at my resume and consider me for a position in your industry.

Respectfully,
Louis Lamore
