

WEEKLY WRITING JOURNAL: Week of Nov. 26th - Nov. 30th, 2018

Tasks

This week is my last week at Snapchat so my tasks are not as intense and not a lot is being asked of me except to enter and review at least 800 user reports and ensure that all test suites are up to date, as well as run two routine tests for new features we will launching for iPhone users.

Challenges

My challenges this week are a little difficult to identify because my tasks have been relatively easy and I've gotten used to the smaller, daily challenges such as balancing each tasks at the same time and ensuring accuracy. I think that my bigger chalk of the week is beginning to reflect on what I've learned and assessing my growth as well as, thinking of what I will do next from here.

Outcomes and Growth

This week has been an interesting week because I'm not only reflecting on my week's growth but my growth over the past 8 weeks. I think that overall, my growth has been significant in gaining insight on being a more modern technical writer at Snapchat. I've learned how to specialize in micro and macro levels of app development, production, and testing; I've learned how to use the skills from my advanced technical writing and planning and testing user documents courses, and I've learned how to read a little bit of code and resolve minor user issues accurately and professionally. Overall, working at Snapchat as a QA Location Data Entry Specialist has been a rewarding and fun experience!
