

Whitney Museum Field Trip

Carlos Cruz

Introduction

My class and I attended to the Whitney Museum of American Art on the Lower West Side of Manhattan. I must say it was a nice experience because of the amount of Art works presented in the museum. The Whitney Museum provided hand crafted and colorful works that were enjoyable to everyone presented.

Pat Phillips The Farm, 2018

In the visit to the Whitney Museum of American Art, I came across this work of art. The painting has a field, with a hand drawn in it. The hand appears to have a tool to work in the field and it also has three shoes drawn at the bottom of the painting. Not only that but those exact shoes are on the floor of the museum. I found this to be creative because I have not seen this type of art work before. I did also like the painting because it reminds me of the fields that hard working immigrants work in, to make a living out of it.

Kyle Thurman
Suggested Occupation
22, 2018

This art work is interesting because there is only one part of the drawing in color. I believe it transmits some sort of emotion because of the colors being used. The rest of the drawing as you can see, is in white. You are only able to see the outline of the male's body. This drawing reminds me of the situation that many Latino and Black males have with Police brutality. The male that is being held by the neck seems to be needing some help, however, the male standing is not caring about the fight. This is such a powerful drawing in my opinion

Kota Ezawa

National Anthem, 2018

This video presented in the museum was amazing. I did enjoy the cartoon film and the story behind it. This film is about Football players protesting by taking a knee during the National Anthem of the United States. They were against police brutality and the player who started this protest was Colin Kaepernick. The previous quarterback of the San Francisco 49ers. I found this film powerful because actions do have to be taken when anyone in the country suffers from police brutality.