

Philosophy Statement

Clare Romero, RN

NYCCT

NUR 4130 Sec. E747

Professor Jose Hernandez, MS, BS, RN

April 6, 2016

Philosophy Statement:

Nursing: The practical philosophy of well-being is exhibited through the nursing care we provide our clients. A person is an individual who possesses life, and nursing allows all people, especially the ill, to continue their journey with dignity, encouragement, guidance and support. There are times when an individual falls into the downs of their journey and need a hand to lift them from that point in their path. Nursing IS that helping hand we all need sometimes. A person may exist without an arm, leg or one of its senses, but they continue to be an integral part of existence with a soul and feelings. One of the feelings many people experience when they are in need is fear, and loneliness. When this occurs, let nursing be the energy that feeds the soul, brings companionship to the loneliness, and provide power to the existence of life. Being a nurse is that unique person which promotes positivity and promotes keeping the body in tune with hope and desire to be. For it is in nursing the individual back to health, that we, as nurses, strive for. It would be remiss to not consider the opposite possibility of life, coming to fruition. If the cycle to the end of life should be, then let nursing be the force that reaches out to guide the body, and soul towards the path of continuing that journey into the unknown, but let nursing bring you through that gate with love, dedication, and dignity. The hard work of health's interdisciplinary team is in the heart of nursing. For nurses must advocate, encourage, and provide safe, holistic, patient-centered care. We teach patients and their families on diseases, treatments, and healthy behaviors to improve their outcome.

The core value and beliefs of nursing are kindness, honesty persistence, and lifelong learning. Knowing that being a nurse encompasses so much, makes this profession rewarding on to itself.

Knowing that as a nurse, we have brought our fellow brothers and sisters through their weak moment in life and achieved the goals gives me the passion I personally feel in being a nurse.