Do you think the language of the text message is a good invention? In this article, Texting Shorthand Annoys Purists and May Have Lasting ~~of the text message~~ Impact by Beth Myden is about the definition of the language of the text message, how it affects the education system, and how it impact others in the real life. I agreed with the author that the language of the text message is useful but not everyone agrees that it is good invention.

Thesis must include 3 subtopics

Definition of the language of the <sup>text</sup> message is Vocabulary produced by texting which include acronyms, homonyms, and abbreviations. An example from the article is LOL which stands for laughing out loud. CVL&R means see you later. These abbreviations become new English words. According to the article "the vocabulary of text messaging realizes an old lexicographical dream attempted and failed at by George Bernard Shaw" means George Bernard Shaw tried to create new vocabulary words similar to the vocabulary of text messaging. The language of the text message is like a new vocabulary system created by people without trying to make or create one.

The language of the text message is affecting the education system by allowing some of vocabulary from text messages to be use in exam. An example from the article is the Scottish Qualification Authority allow phrase like 2 B R NT 2 B and I LUV u to be acceptable in exam papers. Another example education officials in New Zealand might accept some abbreviation like WOT on the exam paper too. According to the ~~text~~ Article Denis Pyatt said "Text messaging is one of the more exciting developments of language that has occurred for long time. This quote shows the ~~text~~ language of text message is a good thing in education. This means the language of the ~~text~~ message is growing popular.

The impact of the language the text message is influencing people to use in school such as exam papers. Others think it a ridiculous idea to use it beside texting. One example from article is Newspapers called the Scottish proposal which allow some use of texting message language to be use in exams, ridiculous. While Judy Turner a member of Parliament in New Zealand disagree with the newspaper about the scottish proposal ridiculous. An quote from the article "But there is no pristine version of English that must be protected from alien incursion," said Denis Pyatt means there are no right or wrong when it comes to protecting the language of English. This show some people like the idea of using the language of text message in exams but some don't.

✓ The language of the text message system is an invention when comes to texting but not when it comes to exam paper or writing. The article is about the definition of the language of the text message, while it also about it affects the education system and the impact on others. Some people might think it useful but some don't beside texting.
