A moment in my education is when I was in middle school and my teacher lied to me about receiving honor roll. Most of my life I was not the best at school. I struggled with school for many years. I had no determination to do my homework or study for test and ~~quiz~~ quizzes until one marking period I got in trouble for having low grades and I decided to make a change about and start improving for the next marking period. So as I ~~was~~ begin doing that my teachers began to notice my grades got way better ~~and~~ and one day in class my teacher pulled me aside and said a received honor roll and I was excited because it was a ceremony every ~~month~~ month when people received their awards and turns out she lied and I was crushed when my day came for awards. This made me want to get better grade so that then we never be ~~call~~ any confusion on ~~why~~ why I didn't make the honor roll. In the moment I was very hurt and tears up because I truly was working very hard to do better and I ~~thought~~ thought I was being recognize for my work and it felt good.
