

To: Professor Ellis
Form: Pamela Drake
Subject: Project Planning
Date: February 3, 2016

Story #1

The first non-fiction story I would like to tell is when I first came to America. This story will include the decision that led to me coming to America and where I stayed once I arrived. It will also include what my first job was and how I decided to not settle out of desperation. I will include how I worked as a babysitter for many years and developed a close relationship with the family and the two children that I looked after.

Story #2

The second non-fiction story I would like to tell is about my struggle with school and finding the right major to develop my career. I will start the story by explaining what was my first choice and how I realized that it wasn't the right choice for me. My struggle with math has been a determining factor in changing my major and I will include my many attempts to overcome challenges with math. My story begins with my childhood and being allowed to pass grade levels without really understanding math. As a direct result, math has always been a hindrance for me. I will discuss the majors that I have changed to my current major as a Professional and Technical Writing student. My story will end with the decision I made to give up my full-time job and become a full-time student just to complete my degree and how I feel I made the right choice.

Decision

I have decided to go with my second non-fiction story because it has the most meaning and is the most current. I feel that it will relate to my readers more and directly will allow me to engage in conversations.