My group-mates (Isaias, Mohammad and Kendrick) and I are working on a project regarding green space on campus. For those that attends New York City College of Technology should know that our campus do not have a lot of green space. Maybe just a little bit here and there. But not space for students and faculties to relax and enjoy a little bit of the nature.

Students and faculties are under constant pressure because they have assignments, homework, projects, exams and researches to be completed under a limited amount of time. Under constant pressure will cause students and faculties to have mental distress which may cause further serious health to people who are under constant stress.

One of the best way to relieve stress is to be surrounded by nature. According to studies, nature is the best way to help a person to relax and rejuvenate. It's almost impossible for a college or university to have a tropical rain forest or a mountain for us to enjoy. Instead, we can plant trees, grass, flowers, and any different type of plants on open campus space to create green space for us to enjoy. It's the end of the semester, everybody is extremely stressful on upcoming finals, final presentations, and researches.

Please attend our information session about how campus green can help students and faculties relax and rejuvenate which can help future generation to become successful under constant stress.
