

KATE MOROSS

BIOGRAPHY

An art director, illustrator and graphic designer. Kate's work spans across artistic direction, moving imagery, typography and illustration. In 2012, Kate founded Studio Moross, a London-based multidisciplinary design company as an expansion upon her own work and a way to collaborate with other creatives. At the young age of twenty-six she has achieved a prominent position in the world of designing. She is currently the art director of Studio Moross. Her work has spanned from music videos to designing the tour visuals for One Direction. "I very much don't conform to what most people think of what a graphic designer would be," Kate confesses.

EDUCATION

She went on to Wimbledon University of the Arts, London. In 2008, she earned her Bachelor of Arts degree with first class from Camberwell University of the Arts.

Now that she is no longer a student, Kate has recently joined University of the Underground, an institution dedicated to reimagining the rules of countercultures for the 21st century. Kate will be a guest tutor for the university this autumn, and here she speaks to Ted Gioia on the challenges of design education, unconventional creativity, and pushing the outer limits of the imagination.

DESIGN STYLE

Her designs follow a certain pattern such as three sided shapes, illegible typography and she is fond of freeform lettering. She is recognized for her typographic illustrations. Kate says she finds her influence from anything from candy wrappers, and streetwear to science and television. She is also influenced by mathematics, psychology, and geometry, Kate uses these things to generate interesting concepts or visual patterns.

THEIR DRIVE

As a non binary person what drives Kate's work is looking at design and design interaction through the eyes of different genders.

I'm constantly battling peoples and businesses who don't have a third or fourth or fifth box for when you sign up for something and have to enter your gender. That's something of a small battle I'm fighting every day.

ROMANCE
