

BBP, Site Visit

It was a cold day but a productive one. One thing that was important to me on this day was that Ambar came on the site visit with us. A senior's perspective is often different than that of new students, neither one better than the other, just different.

I also appreciated the contributions made by so many students. Learning about art, food, history and more along the waterfront can lead to increased tourism and for us that means jobs and opportunity.

Finally, the stop at Brooklyn Roasting was important. Without local business owners opportunities for tourism are limited. They have changed with the waterfront and I suspect they will change even more.