When I graduated from high school I have no idea what career I wanted. So I chose a random major, construction management. But after three months of studying construction management, I don't think this is my feature career. So I talk to some of my friends and hope to get some advice from them. They told me about jobs in the hotel and I decided to switch to hospitality management. I used to work as a waiter in a restaurant and I like to see the guests have a satisfied face because of our food and our customer service. I'm sure about my career goal is yet, I hope Hospitality management is my future career so I don't have to change it again.
