

Edgar Macagba

Hospitality management was not the first major I intended to pursue in college. I really love Math and analytical thinking that is why I chose to spend the first year of my college studying Civil Engineering. However, in order to pay for my tuition and provide basic needs for myself I worked in a restaurant and started as a dishwasher and eventually moved up on becoming an assistant manager. It was tough to play a huge role in the restaurant and I loved the atmosphere that restaurant jobs gave me. So I decided to leave Civil Engineering aside and pursue hospitality management in order to gain more knowledge. I know that with my outgoing personality and good work ethic, after finishing Hospitality Management, I will be a very successful Restaurant Manager or hopefully be placed in a bigger role in this field.