Color Study : Green

The color green is the mix between blue and yellow which makes it a secondary color and it also happens to be the one color that the human eye could see the most shades of. It's a color with various amounts of meanings behind it from all different parts of the world which is one of the many things that make it a unique color all around. Green can represent serenity, nature, luck, and change, it could also represent greed, jealousy, poison, and death and was even seen as sacred in Ancient Egypt which is why they made the floors of their temples that color. It was also seen as a symbol of love and fertility in the 1400's which was the reason why so many women chose that as their desired wedding dress color during the time. Green has grown to be my personal favorite color not just because of its elegance and vibrancy but also because it fits with who I am as a person and has always seemed to show up in significant parts of my life that were both good and bad. I see myself as a very down to earth and analytical person who prefers to keep a fair balance in everything they do and just like the "GO" color it is i'm always ready to jump into things once my mind is set on it. I also happen to be born on Earth day and have a strong admiration for nature which is such an unironic coincidence but here I am being a whole tree hugger. The element of my zodiac sign is Earth as well and one of the lucky colors for Taurus is green. Whenever I see green anywhere i'm automatically drawn to it and can't keep my eyes off whatever it may be at that moment. There's something about it that other colors just don't have and it's ability to either look very delicate or intense and trigger various amounts of emotions depending on the shade and execution is what makes it stand out from the rest.
