

The Impactable Meaning Behind RVP

A word that will be part of my discourse community is RVP which is part of my work community; many would not understand the concept of the word. RVP is a level in my workplace that many of whom work there try to reach because it is the beginning of something that will change your life. It is ownership it refers to the conditional right of an eligible Regional Vice President. Therefore, the goal of newly hired employee is to be an RVP.

My first experience when I heard this word is, what the hell does RVP mean? Why is it such a big deal? I recently started working in a financial wealth management company in Manhattan; on my first day of working, it was just an orientation where I got the sense of the community around me and learned more about the job. I attended a meeting where they went over the goals, what the company is about, and what we will be doing exactly. In that meeting they told me a lot of new information which made me confused on what they were talking about. Many words were thrown at me that I have never heard before making me overwhelmed on my ability to work here. Some of the words included district leader, division, regional district, and so much more, but what really stood out among the team was RVP. That seemed to be the first part of a goal everyone was trying to reach it is where you have your own office and own team--it's where you make things happen for yourself--and help clients along the way. I never really was focused on this word I just came to my work and did what I was supposed to do to get pay in the first month but that has changed over time and made me realize the importance of reaching that. It changed when I finally understand the definition of the word, when I saw how my own boss was one and what he did and what he has. It is something that it can help in my future and my family as well.

The word RVP became important to me and my community because it's what my boss is, he is currently an RVP who is trying to become a million-dollar earner in the company. However, for big things to happen we first need to become an RVP this is something very hard to do because it requires a lot of dedication, time, and patience. Once I understood how the company works, what I'm supposed to do, how I'm supposed to do it and the importance of growth in the company I started to work very hard. I had to make some sacrifices which was getting rid of my social life since sometimes I would get off work so late and start work so early. Honestly, it was stressful at times, but it's a goal I want to reach. When the second semester of school started, I had to find a way to fix my schedule to have enough time for my classes and work. The first couple of days it was tough since when my classes ended, I would rush to work, but knowing that I could be promoted to RVP really encouraged me to do my best out of a complicated situation.

There is a specific way in using the word correctly that will indicate membership in my community. I say this because not everyone who works there is part of that world. The new people have different roles and are not so involved in reaching that goal because they still have not proven themselves that it is something they really want. They understand the importance of why one should become an RVP but do not work as hard to become one. They don't know or grow in the company at all some even resign after training. In my community we help each other out as much as we can, all of us are after that goal and is something we can do. There isn't a real reason why we should hold each other down. We are like a big family; we are the ones who stay late but make things happen. I was lucky enough to be part of such a good humble work community where everyone gets along and treat each other with respect.

Anyone can say the word, but one thing is saying the word and another one making use of the word. Many who come to work with me have the motivation to say I want to become, I will be, soon, and I'm going to be an RVP. On the other hand, those people who never put in the effort or work enough to understand that it is not something would have difficulty becoming RVP. There will be challenges presented in getting there, but those who work hard would succeed. Furthermore, it will be worth it on the long run it's something many have done before they become the people we envy today and look up to in the company. This word changes when people from outside, the discourse community, use the word since they just say it because they want to. It is something kind of funny to say but not really grasp what it means and why they are saying it.

I think the people who should know this word is the people who is working in the company, as well as people who are just starting in the company. That is because as much as they will be confused with the process and the word, they will want to know what it means. Once they do it will be up to them if they go for it and try to thrive or like other give up on it at all. Nevertheless, RVP is considered a difficult term for me but its an accomplishment that would forever be part of my discord community due to the impact it has on my life today.
