

Janet Lefler Dining Room

MEMORANDUM

To: Professor Abreu

From: Nayalynn Martinez

Date: October 3, 2019

Re: New York Times Restaurant Review

For this week, Pete Wells introduces a restaurant that is more out of the norm when it comes to the entrance of the place. In Greenwich Village, the restaurant which is called Frevo is a modern restaurant. Thomas Laberthe created beautiful pieces in which are all in the entrance which fools guests thinking its a gallery when indeed there is a restaurant right through the hall.

Pete Wells describes Frevo as an unusual place because of its beautiful decorations and how you feel from the busy New York city just in a place to dine. Frevo offers their standard five courses menu for $124. Options are available so if you want to order a different plate the additional price is decent amount. This place offers a reasonable amount compared to other restaurants.

I am not interested in going to this place because although the gallery is a very attracting thing to see, the dine is to private for me. Food does not seem appealing and it is portioned with a small product on a big plate.