PROGRAM OVERVIEW

The City Tech Hospitality Management department provides students with a hospitality career education that integrates applied management practices and theory with liberal arts and sciences in one of the world's most dynamic cities. Hospitality Management faculty seek to create an innovative learning environment for students, fostering leadership for a dynamic hospitality industry and an ever-changing world. Through place-based learning, we break down the walls of the traditional classroom and encourage students, the future leaders of the hospitality industry, to explore the city and world where they live and work.

RESOURCES

Our culinary laboratories are equipped with both traditional and state-of-the-art technology found in major food production operations. In addition to the department classrooms on campus, the faculty—who are specialists in many areas of the hospitality and tourism industry—recognize that many of the most effective learning laboratories are located and experienced off campus. These dynamic opportunities include back-of-the-house tours of the finest hotels in New York City, dining in the best restaurants, walking tours of some of the culturally richest and most diverse neighborhoods and demonstrating service learning through active participation in community events.

TRANSFER STUDENTS

There are great differences in hospitality course offerings from one college to another. Credit will be granted, however, for those courses taken at other colleges if the courses are considered equivalent to those offered at City Tech.

CAREERS:

BTech graduates are prepared for leadership roles in Hotels and Resorts, Restaurant Operations, Tourism and Travel Management, Culinary and Pastry Arts, Sales and Marketing and Events Management
