1. A women in South Korea started her own business called Energy Nomad in 2014, her name is Hye-rin Park. she created Nomad because she felt as if it's hard for women to succeed and push through the corporate world. Ms Park feels as if the corporate world is a male dominant business and regarding education that us women are equal to men but when we try to set foot in the traditional companies women are undervalued. Ms Parker developed a lightweight portable USB and lantern powered by moving water. The goal for her business is to convert any type of moving water into stored energy to empower people by providing an affordable, stable and sustainable energy solution beyond traditional energy grid. Since renewable energy is the quickest and growing industry it does have lack of mobility and its pricey. Ms Park solved this problem by creating a light and sustainable turbine that generates over 5 watts of electricity enough to charge and USB connected device.

2. In order to think of your ideas as an entrepreneur it has to be something people need and want, and your ideas should be progressive. This article is written by someone who knew and or talked to entrepreneurs that was facing battles, and it's mainly stating that you must be a doer instead of a thinker for your idea to come alive and succeed. Some entrepreneurs do good with planning everything but when it comes to showing their potential pitch to clients they flop and maybe not have the right people beside them to help them. The first step to making your ideas come to life is to face challenges and not procrastinate. The next step is to embrace your purpose and mission because this gives you the motivation you need. You should believe what your idea is and or what your doing will and can exist in the world and You shouldn't have doubt. The last advice stated in this article is that you must find your own niche and learning how to act outside your comfort zone.

3. There are several types of entrepreneurs , the skeptical , the copycat, the research entrepreneur, determined one, and the accomplished entrepreneur. Each upcoming entrepreneur is unique , they have their own ideas and beliefs but the one common thing about all is that they have the desire to create freedom in their work. The skeptical one is someone who if so notices success in other entrepreneurs they start to question others . They can be skeptical of success and believe its not possible maybe based on their own life experiences. This is not so good because when your stuck thinking this way you'll never get to a place positive in your mind that will allow you to take action . the copycat will have the exact website setup and business cards for example while the researcher loves to learn . The determines one sees success without being a copycat and will make it no matter what while the accomplished entrepreneur been through all the stages of entrshipershop and figured out the things to be successful.
