Introduction

My Culmination Project was stage managing a full length musical production. I have stage managed several shows with this same company, Kidz Theater. For this production, we were doing Les Misérables at The Center at West Park. First of all, it was a space we had never worked in before, and second of all, it was formerly a church that had newly been transformed into a theatrical space. So we were working with theater management that was hosting a full theatrical company for the first time ever. This seemed like a fairly overwhelming venture to me, so I decided the best course was to document as much as possible. I did this in order to stay ahead of any potential issues, and so we can look back and see any mistakes we can correct for next time.

The skills include:

- 1. Prep documents
- 2. Run tech rehearsals
- 3. Problem solving (technically and personally)
- 4. Calling shows

The Process

The two most important documents that I needed to create for the process to run smoothly were:

• Performance Report

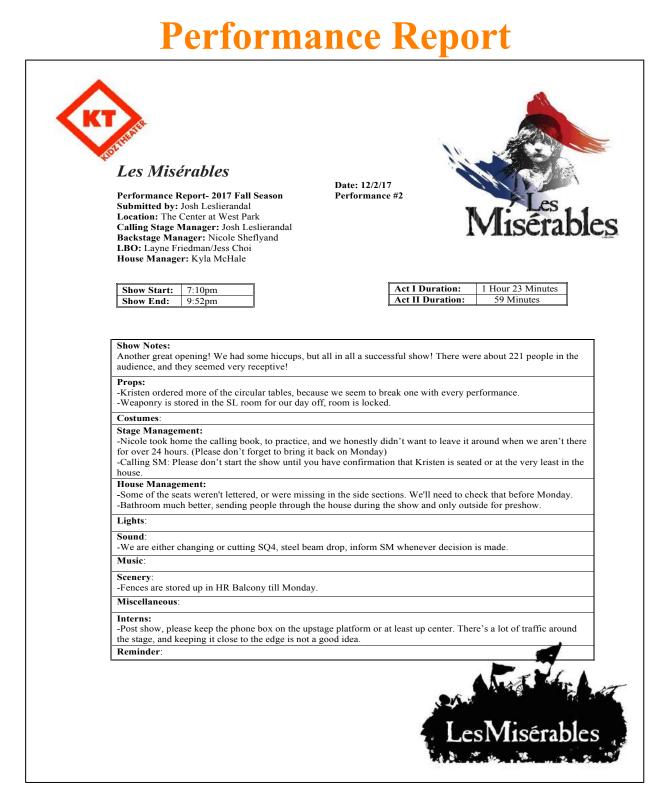

This document was so important because it was an organized way to get information to the entire production team. Any mistakes that were made, anything we needed to fix, any pertinent information that I needed to share would be communicated via these reports.

• Show Run List

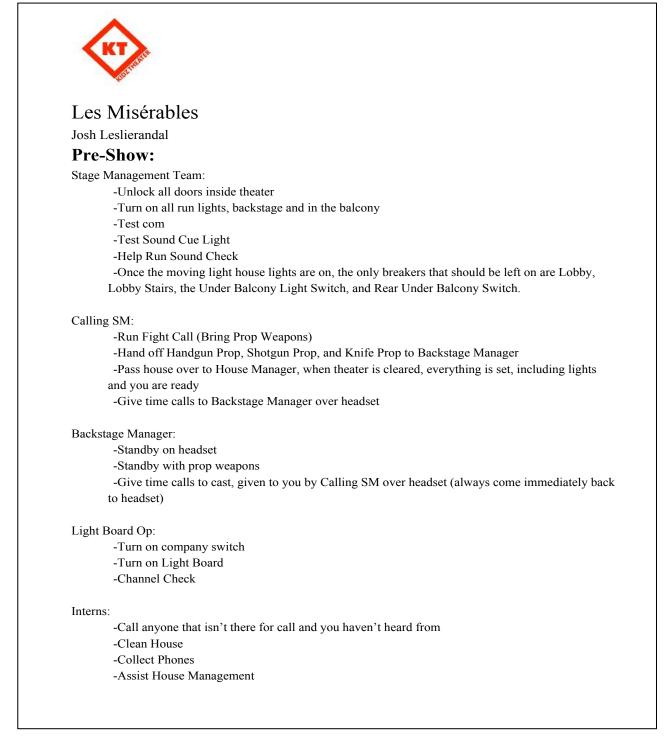

This document was a concise way for me to put in writing what every single person on the production team should be doing before, during, and after the performance. These are things that I won't have to tell people to do on headset, this document is a physical guide of what needs to get done at certain times.

Live Production/Safety

- •Safety of the performers comes before anything else.
- •We had prop/fake firearms in our production.
- •No weapons or blanks were ever discharged in the spacee. We only used sound cues to simulate the sounds of the weapons.
- •The performers had to go through a thorough fight call, and check their weapons in and out with a member of stage management.

Conclusion:

Overall, the production was very successful. We hit several bumps along the way, as any production unavoidably will, but it didn't effect any of our overall goals. Documenting everything was truly an integral part of the success of the show. A fair amount of things would have fallen to the wayside, if they hadn't been documented and distributed out. Our tech process, performance process, and strike process all moved along fairly smoothly. We had 8 performances with close to 400 audience members at each performance, and nothing went wrong! We had prepared for almost any situation we could think of, in case anything went wrong, but we opened and closed the show with much success. None of our performers ever got hurt, the worst that happened was we broke a few props, but they were easily replaceable. From start to finish, we were over prepared and we over documented everything, which led to a successful run of the show.
