So my dream job for the future is to work in any of the top gaming industries. When I do this, this will surely become one of the highest moments in my life because not only will it be a hobby but it will become a career too. I want to be “top dog” when it comes to game design, to the point where I can just talk about my experience with a certain game and still be able to get paid a good amount. Gaming was something of a passion for me through out all my years and truly believe it gave depth to my design work.

Interestingly, I learned from last class that some websites are actually very bad for the designer to participate in. These sites make various designers battle it out against each other and even when you become the winner, you aren't reward with sufficient funds. Rather, one should take the time out to call these upstarting businesses and ask for a partnership in creating a logo.

On the side of game design, I like the idea of freelancing book and movie covers. I tend to side on a minimalist work ethic when design and if I paired it up with book design, I could create very intriguing designs. Plus, I want to make movie posters or any kind of posters because I believe there are just fun and the idea of people having it on their walls makes me happy.

I think minimalistic designs are the best because not only does it represent the idea it also leaves room for the viewer to think. While, thinking about the work the viewer becomes more attached and is a lot more likely to purchase.

So in all, go out and do what your passionate for because that's what will keep you happy. If happy your design will grow and be its best a representing who you are. All this will make a name for yourself in the business world and all while you doing something you enjoy.
