"Meeting and interviewing are especially important in this internship. Because it affects whether you can bring new inspiration to you through different ideas and inspirations from your peers, and then the communication skills with customers are also an indispensable part.

This internship is consistent with my feelings in this department's expertise. The projects are all related to logo design and typography design, the only difference is that I work with other team members. It is much better to communicate in a team meeting rather than via email or text message. Therefore, in the internship group, we would discuss the project by video conference, and then share our ideas and drafts through the screen to demonstrate. This is far more efficient than texting or emailing, and it can identify and solve problems in the first place.

In the article: "7 Networking Tips for Art and Design Students" Mention about there is no point in attending social events if you only stay close to your friends and do not want to make new ones. Make it a rule to spend at least an hour talking to people you have never met. Introduce yourself to people in your neighborhood and ask them about their jobs, backgrounds, and ambitions.

This tips is particularly good, the reason is that many people are exposed to different things, have different experiences, and can use the advice of others to prepare for and cope with various situations. For example, in the internship interview, if you do not communicate with people who have interviewed or have interview experience, you will not know what to do during the interview, and the success rate of the interview will naturally decline without enough experience. especially in the major of communication design, learning how to communicate with customers and team members can save a lot of time in chatting and understanding the content. You can let your working environment and inspiration can extract suggestions from other people's thinking ideas and create.
