LIB 1201 | November 26, 2012

Organization

Organization

Sources/citations

- If you summarize or quote a source you MUST cite it in your paper text.
 - Anything that you did not know before beginning your research for this paper must be cited!
- Summarize rather than paraphrase: this strategy will help you avoid plagiarism.
- You MUST include your Works Cited list with your paper
 - The last page of the paper, not a separate document

When in doubt: CITE!

Most Important Parts of a Citation:

1. Author
2. Title
3. Date
 1. Date of publication
 2. date of access, if electronic
4. If article:
 1. Journal/magazine/newspaper title
 2. Volume
 3. Pages

(Badke, p. 199-200)

Three Rules of Citation

- Rule of Least Confusion (show your readers exactly what you want them to see; no more, no less)
- Rule of Brevity (Accomplish the first rule as succinctly as possible)
- Rule of Readability (Does any citation style really accomplish this for ALL media?)

Why Cite?

Citation

- shows respect for your community
- Communicates clearly within a community (like jargon)
- Reveals what kinds of evidence are most important to a community
- Builds context for your argument
- Gives credit where credit is due

Citation Activity

- Form groups of 3-4: one group per table should work
- Working in a group, and considering the Three Rules, develop your own citation style for two of these five items
- The rules of your style should reflect the “community of inquiry” that is this class
 1. Article: “Mirror, Mirror on my Facebook Wall”
 2. Website: Insidehighered.com (group selects one article to cite)
 3. Ebook: @ is for Activism: Dissent, resistance and rebellion in a digital culture (find in CUNY+)
