Thanks, Monica, this is all extremely helpful! I will let you know if I have any further questions. This should keep me occupied for now.

Best,

hi Lucas: I just did a workshop on bibliometrics and other quantitative data you can use to argue the impact of your work (see attached). I think the PARSE workshop from faculty commons has examples of qualitative and narrative info. you can use (e.g. this is a highly respected publication in my speciality of Victorian Studies (or whatever)).

Your work in Academic Works won't get crawled by Google Scholar for a few weeks so your download count report from Academic Works will lag and any uptick in your citation rates may lag a little too. For humanities, citations matter less but they are still good evidence.

Please consider tweeting and/or blogging about your material in Academic Works to attract new readers (with links, of course).

You will want to quickly set up your Google Scholar profile for easy access to your citation counts (and evidence via linking to it). If you need more help, we can set up a meeting. thanks, Monica

Hi Monica,

Hope you are doing well! I finally managed to upload my articles to Academic Works. Thanks for advising me to upload these articles.

I'm starting to put together my e-PARSE, and am particularly thinking about how to communicate the impact and reach of the outlets in which my articles have appeared. Does the library database and/or AcademicWorks offer a way for me to easily do this? e.g. view the metrics for any given journal article? Any advice you might have for me when it comes to presenting my work would be greatly appreciated. I understand that you must be quite busy, so no pressure. Thank you so much.

best,

Lucas
