

History of the Wedding Dresses

Wedding dresses were always known to be presented based on your social status and wealth. Before white being a known color for wedding dresses the color blue was entitled for all the symbols. Throughout the years it shows otherwise.

This was a wedding dress in the 18th century. As you can see this dress is a colored wedding dress with floral patterns. It has long flare sleeves and has a petticoat structure. This is a gown that could be worn after the wedding day without it being known it was a wedding dress. The fabric was cotton and the has square neckline. It has a lace up corset on the upper body.

This was a wedding dress in the 1920s. This time period was historic for fashion because it was known for the roaring 20s. This was the fashion revolution for wedding dress. Annie Kanteger wore this dress to marry her husband. It has a scoop neckline and a hemline before the knees. This was created with lace, silk and embroidery with beads.

This is royal princess Diana in 1981. She is wearing white ball gown dress. She had a frilled neck lined with puffy sleeves. Her train was 25 foot long. It was embroidered with 10,000 pearls. It has a lot of volume.

This is Madonna in the 2000 getting married. She was wearing a strapless lace sleeves ball gown dress. It was filled with lace on the veil to her sleeves.

This is in 2011 when Kate Middleton wore an iconic dress. She brought back the lace sleeves. She had v neckline with a A-line silhouette.