The website I did a report on for 10/29/18 is about the website Archdaily, the website is a location of knowledge, for the interested. This is a website is a large assortment of information new for any and all to use for parti or precedent studies. The main audience of this website is geared towards the individual who is interested in architectural projects, may it be a professional or a student who needs real-world examples of building types. The information on this website varies from classical to modern buildings. The topics covered in this website a varied and far between as you can see engineering, details, CNC milling, and architectural interior in a website search. Your world of architecture is truly opened when you get to see what other Architectural firms have done and what is truly possible in the present day. Other topics on this website are architectural news, products, events and a database. Basic information on the buildings "SQ area, materials, architecture firm" are also posted The graphics on this website are a combination of white and blue, really easy to read and understand. I would visit this website again as I use it for every design class thus far.
