The website I did a report on for 11/2/18 is on the NYC city planning, this is a website for an architect or architectural student who wants to stay in the know of the zoning in this city. The main focus of this website is to inform the viewer or reader of the complexity of the zoning code and is the answer to what a professional architect should check on a client before taking a job. The main audience of this website is geared towards a firm and the professional who works in the city of New York. The information on this website is a complex system of maps and data zoning, that the DOB (Department of Buildings), New York City zoning resolution and the building code operate by. The topics covered in this website are too many to count, it is an endless amount of information to fill a library with. The graphics on this website are the one issue of this website as the information is extremely helpful but the graphic is too mundane in my opinion. The zoning and building codes are really complex aspects of the building industry, but they seem to be written by a lawyer not an architect and it all ends up being intimidating to start learning.
