

It has been nearly one week since the conclusion of Vogue World: London at Theatre Royal Drury Lane, yet the enchantment of the event continues to linger. Vogue's second edition of its yearly fashion and performing arts event, which followed its successful inauguration in the Meatpacking District of Manhattan the previous year, was held exclusively in London's West End on September 14 for a single evening. The event featured several notable performances, including FKA Twigs's captivating interpretation of "It is a Fine Day," accompanied by Rambert. Additionally, there was a powerful joint performance by Stormzy and Sophie Okonedo, a reinterpretation of the iconic balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet, and a grand finale where the original superstars took the stage for a live rendition of "Sweet Dreams" by Annie Lennox.

Ellen von Unwerth, a renowned photographer renowned for her captivating and sophisticated portrayals of fashion throughout different historical periods, is unquestionably the most appropriate candidate to chronicle the dynamic ambiance found backstage. The esteemed artist attended the venue during the evening, documenting impromptu moments as notable celebrities and models interacted behind the scenes. Ellen von Unwerth's photographic documentation of Vogue World: London examines multiple facets of the theatrical performance featuring Lila Moss, which serves as a tribute to Eliza Doolittle. Additionally, the photographs shed light on the palpable camaraderie among the original supermodels, offering a retrospective perspective.

This article is relevant to the course because it demonstrates that one's beauty can be captured regardless of our skin tone or race just by finding a passionate and committed photographer such as Ellen Von with her ability to capture the essence of fashion in a unique and captivating way without the need of pretending to be someone else by just being ourselves. Ellen has helped shape the visual landscape of the fashion world and as students, we can learn how to explore different aspects of fashion, develop our own artistic vision, and draw inspiration from.
