

Nursing Philosophy

Magdalena Sekscinski

New York City College of Technology

Professional Nursing Practice

NUR 4130 Section OL48

Professor Dato

March 14, 2015

Nursing Philosophy

My philosophy entails providing healthcare, protection, prevention of illness and injury to individuals and communities. The following are my values and attributes pertaining nursing: accountability, professionalism and compassion. Nurses should demonstrate a level of self-regulation and autonomy at the same time holding firmly principles, guidelines and rules that guide their profession.

While attending the people who face difficult situation, a high level of professionalism is paramount. Nurses should be well equipped concerning the scope, standard of practice, code of ethics of nursing. Compassion is enhanced by nurse-patient relationship shown in handling patients with the utmost respect and being patient with individuals of all lifestyle.

My personal beliefs are: One, a nurse should work hard to achieve the best health quality for the patients regardless of their situation. Secondly, clinical judgment is paramount in dealing with different patients' situations. Nursing is a calling to a selfless person.