Unit 3 Writing Assignment

When the professor first introduced the idea about “repurposing”, my initial reaction was that repurposing meant changing the purpose of an existing idea that already has its initial purpose. The mode of repurposing began to gel in my head when I read that we had to create a website using our previous assignments. My initial plan for the website was choosing robotics because there is so much information about it and it has a big and broad audience that it's meant for. Also include the benefits of being part of robotics for upcoming college students so they have the opportunity to receive college scholarships to all schools no matter the status. And including real world networking with different people of different ages which can potentially have a great opportunity for your career. So I decided to break down what robotics is, the process of what you do during the robotics season so people get a feel to what they should expect. Also provide people past experience of being involved with robotics and the impact it had on them. Now that I'm close to the end of this project, all my initial plans were workable. When working on my website, I first had a plan to show a video about a close member of the robotics community experience, but I couldn't find the video on my computer. So I had to find an alternative video on youtube that talked about a robotics member's experience being involved. Besides that, everything else I have planned stayed the same; it worked out perfectly. So after revision on my website; i've decided to change the amount of videos I have linked. I took down half of the amount of videos I had and described what the video said in my own words because the feedback made it seem like I was just taking people's work and just including it in my website. I feel like I was able to reach all my initial goals because there was so much information for me to use so I could explain the topic in a much simpler way. In the process of this project, I learned that I have the ability to persuade people into reading my topic. If I had the time to start this project all over again, I feel like I wouldn't change the way I introduce the topic because the initial vision I had for the website to look like it came to reality because it wasn't difficult to make my website intriguing for any view who reads my website.
