The process of writing about the U1 assignment wasn't too hard but coming up with an educational story about myself and finding time for myself to think was hard because I had to reflect on the interactions I've experienced and how I had learned from the people around me since I was actively socializing with friends/colleagues which allowed me to experience the situations. But it was also an interesting way to reflect on yourself which some people don't or won't have the time I myself was struggling a little by procrastinating and delaying it, which caused me to rush a little during the shitty drafts and I realized even the actual one that was posted needed more improvements. Overall this helped me find an understanding of how it's about the process not the result that matters about writing anything, and also how certain articles helped understand the way you could interpret educational writing.
