

GUN VIOLENCE

By:David Farez

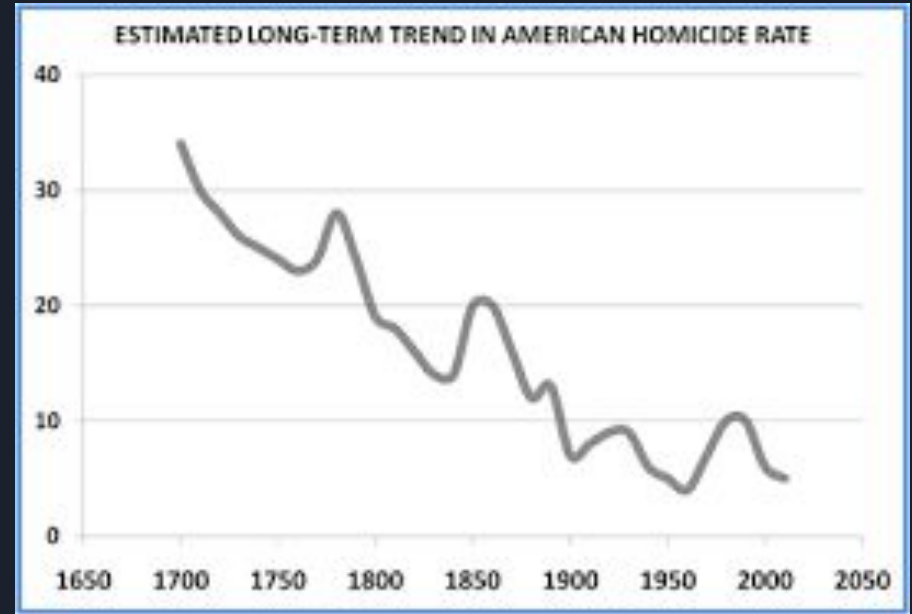

When did gun violence started in the US?

During the 1980s and early 1990s, homicide rates surged in cities across the United States (see graphs at right).

Handgun homicides accounted for nearly all of the overall increase in the homicide rate, from 1985 to 1993, while homicide rates involving other weapons declined during that time frame.

How was gun violence during the 1800's?

This graph show how during the 1700's gun violence was going down but then between the 1750 and 1800's the cases were going up dramatically .

How did gun violence affect society all around the US?

Gun violence affected society all around America in many ways but the people who were affected the most by this issue were children and youth and how gun violence affected them was that most of the children that live in neighborhoods that had a lot of crime going on in the houses after experience all that violence around they started to develop certain inhibited brain development because of the trauma that they had to face at such a young age and this led to most children to not to be able to control their emotions which led to most children to become aggressive and violent because of the fact that they cannot trust anybody around them because of all the trauma that they faced.

What did the government do in order to take control over gun violence in the US?

During the late 1800's the founding father of America created a law that was called the 2 amendment and this law was for was to not only prevent gun violence but to also give the right to some people to own a gun just to defend themselves and also their property, but in this case this law enforcement towards gun ownership did not work and it led to more cases of gun violence around the US.

How was gun violence affected after the 2 amendment was created?

Even after the government created in order to to have more control over gun ownership and also to make sure to give more safety to US citizens but this was not the case and instead of that the second amendment made things worse because people were starting to take advantage of this law and not taking seriously and this led to people to protest and to eradicated the second amendment and this led to some people to agree to whether the second amendment should or should not be eradicated.

