Final Reflection & Portfolio

Final Reflection

In my English class, we had this really interesting assignment called the education narrative. It was all about sharing our personal experiences with school and how those experiences have shaped us. For me, I decided to focus on the challenges I faced due to my hearing difficulties. You see, not being able to hear my teachers properly made it really tough for me to grasp the concepts and keep up with the class. It was frustrating and sometimes made me doubt my abilities. But you know what? I never gave up. When I entered college, things started to change. I began to gain more confidence in myself and my abilities. It was like a whole new world opened up for me. I realized that my hearing difficulties didn't define me or limit what I could achieve. It was a breakthrough moment. And let me tell you, that newfound self-assurance has made a huge difference in my academic journey. I started performing much better in my classes, and I felt more engaged and motivated to learn. Writing the education narrative was a turning point for me. It provided me with valuable insights about myself and my journey as a student. I took the feedback I received from my teacher and classmates seriously and used it to improve my writing skills. It was a process of growth and self-reflection. I learned how to express my thoughts more clearly, organize my ideas effectively, and polish my writing. It wasn't always easy, but I embraced the challenges and saw them as opportunities for growth. In the second major assignment, the U2 reflective annotated narrative, we had to explore a specific topic in-depth. I chose to delve into the issue of climate change. It's such a pressing global issue, and I wanted to understand it better. I researched and analyzed three different sources to gain a deeper understanding of the causes and consequences of climate change. It was eye-opening to discover the complexities of the issue and the various ways in which we can contribute to its solution. Compared to the previous units, U2 felt relatively easier since I only had to find three sources and reflect on them. However, it was still a valuable learning experience that expanded my knowledge and critical thinking skills. In conclusion, my final major assignment has been an incredible journey of self-discovery and growth. It has allowed me to explore my passions, challenge myself creatively, and make a positive impact through my work. Each assignment has pushed me to think critically, conduct research, and communicate my ideas effectively. Through the process of completing these assignments, I have gained a deeper understanding of the subjects I've explored. Whether it was writing a children's book on climate change or analyzing the impact of technology on society, these projects have broadened my perspective and expanded my knowledge. Furthermore, these assignments have taught me the importance of perseverance and dedication. There were moments when I faced challenges and setbacks, but I learned to overcome them and find innovative solutions. This resilience will undoubtedly serve me well in future endeavors. As I reflect on this journey, I am filled with a sense of accomplishment and gratitude. I am grateful for the support and guidance of my professors and peers, who have challenged me to reach new heights. I am also grateful for the opportunity to pursue my passions and make a difference through my work. Moving forward, I am excited to continue my academic journey and apply the skills and knowledge I have gained. I am eager to take on new challenges, explore new subjects, and continue to grow as a learner and a writer.
