Reflection

Reflecting on this U3, it was really hard to find an example of a street art that talked about sexual orientation in school because I find that its a really hard topic to talk about for parents. There a lot of hate and support to the same topic but people doesn't like to comment on it. There a lot information that I found about sexual orientation but also added it in my art street that I wanted to show parents both of the perspectives. I wanted my art to be on the wall of the school so it would easy for my target to see it, so my target are families. For my target I would also add the Staff of the school because there are also the one that are helping the kid in orientation. I want both target from both sides.

Many of the words in my artwork are ones that I put myself in while creating them in an effort to support both viewpoints. The details and each work that I added in the art are because I wanted to prove each side of my audience. There are a lot of support but at the same time there no support from the other. I am aware that I included a nude figure, but my motivation was that our inner feelings are what matter, not how we appear to others or how we feel about ourselves. Reflecting on my art I knew that I could add deeper details but I knew that If i make it even confused my target audience couldn't understand or it could be bad consequences. I my art could actually be in a mural I would have some security cameras so I can see if in the beginning there people who damage my work.

Reflecting on this project I did learn a lot of perspectives from U2 to add in my U3 because if I didn't have information from U2 I would only have added my opinion and I couldn't add the other side opinion. I understood that counselor can be a lot of help from students by being their friends and also that they give their struts, also that school have a lot of programs that can help students on Sexual orientation. In the other side sometimes childrens doesn't trust their parents or their shy to ask about their sexual orientation to them because they don't know how they would react. I knew that its a big topic but kid are the ones that choose who to go for advice.

In conclusion for my reflection Sexual Orientation in school have to be a choice for the students who want to reach out for help because they would have the opportunity to feel free. Students have to choices go to the school for advice or for their parents advice. Sexual orientation is a choice to be learned in schools. In my opinion they can do it as a club so they can feel free to share their ideas and express themselves with other students that are feeling the same way so they can support each other and prevent bullying to happening. Its a good idea they teaching Sexual orientation in school because it help students to understand their classmate and to see that there different type of people. Counselors help students to feel loved and included in society. There are a lot of advantages and disadvantages in both of the pro and con sides. At the end on my research I ended up I agree with both sides
