Final Reflection

This semester has been crazy in a good and bad way I have learned so much about myself as a writer and reader. At the beginning of the semester, I was excited and nervous at the same time because I love to write but to read it's will be a challenge for me. However, the first writing topic I had to do was the discourse communities which I found interesting to read and write about rather it can be a speech or letter. Before we started to do this assignment we had options of discourse communities that are going on in this world that it was a hard choice from. When I started to read the articles about gun violence affecting our world vs how people get treated if you are an immigrant was one of the hard topics I could choose from. Also, I challenged myself like which one I can relate to and write more about so I chose immigration because my parents are both immigrants not only that I have family members and friends that can relate who suffered a lot just to come to this country. As a writer, I had my challenges where my grammar was always a challenge because when I would write fast especially when everything is in my head I just rather type it fast. Even though, that has been a challenge I would not reread what I wrote because I will think that what I wrote is right. It causes me not to have the good grade that I deserve. Just to see my grade what I got for the discourse communities made me upset but at the same time harder because it made me push myself for my next writing assignment I wouldn't do the same mistakes I did. Furthermore, when it came to the annotated bibliography assignment it was an interesting writing assignment because not only I can choose one or two topics we had to choose three different types of topics of social injustice that are going on in this world. I really had three topics I wanted to write about which were gun violence, immigration dreamers, and racism. Those are three topics that are main reasons why this world is awful and cruel and as a community we have to gather together and do something about it. Each topic had an interesting articles that made headlines in the world and made history that impacted everyone in this world. The challenge was how I can summarize each one without leaving any detail behind I really went overhead for this writing because I really like the three topics I have chosen. I learned that if you want good writing you have to take time and always re read my grammar. Even though this writing assignment was overwhelming it was worth it I learned as a writer that I have the ability to do it and always to check my grammar. However, as a writer and reader I have learned that to become a professional architect which is my career I have to take risk even though my worst fear is speaking (presenting) but I approved myself I can do. The final assignment I had to do was a presentation I was nervous and had no idea how to start because I overthink my assignment. The multimodal project was an interesting assignment that I challenged myself to do such as doing a presentation and writing a presentation the best of this project was editing the presentation picture and making it outstanding. Overall this semester as teach me and show me that even though at the beginning it was hard but that was the whole point to learn from your mistakes. Also how I can become better on my grammar and not do the same mistakes I have been struggling with my grammar for a long time but seeing I have grown since the beginning into now I'm so proud of myself.
