Unit 1 Writing Assignment

Word Count: 1115

My Fellow citizens We all love our furry friends and PETA's killing of animals should be alarming to every Supporter for animal rights, every activist working to reform their local pounds, every animal lover who believes, that dogs, cats, cows etc have the right to live a right PETA continues to undermine every time they inject a healthy animal with a lethal dose of poison. As an animal lover myself and a supporter of animal rights i agree with the People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (Peta) goals of protecting animals having such a huge platform to be heard on gives them the opportunity to send messages across the world and expand their knowledge on the topic but the problem is they decide to approach it in such a grotesque and aggressive way which does not help their cause of getting more people to join their movement.

instead they get huge backlash and hate from it because peta of the way peta broadcast their messages they are so self centered and so stuck up with their ways that they see the world in a different perspective from us and don't realize how much of hypocrites they are, and if you don't fit they're standards or checklist of a "perfect" person you are seen as the wrong one, they encourage the toxic behavior of bashing and looking at people that oppose them as less than them because that's their strategy

The issue I'm addressing is exposing companies like peta that play the good guys for the public eye when in reality they're the bad ones doing things in the shadow like euthanizing innocent animals. So i say who are they to play God? seeing how toxic the outside community has become to the animal rights movement and veganism is saddening because instead of progressing were taking two steps backwards and peta is to blame for this. You know why you may have already seen plenty of peta advertisements and what you have thought about it. I certainly have felt sick and disgusted at Peta comparing slaughterhouses to the Holocaust like believe me I understand the wrongs and fully support animal rights and killing for food is totally fine as long as it is a quick and humane process but comparing it to the world's largest mass genocide? Really Peta That's a low ball and shows us how desperate they are to just gather unnecessary bad attention. Another thing peta has come on fire for was back in 2014 peta thought it would be ok to give children an innocent looking book called a "cow's life" [1] but once they opened it they would see horrifying images of baby cows being electrocuted, factory farms with machetes leaving kids scarred and parent outraged. Can you believe that they are exposing innocent naive children to these horrible images and giving them a disgusting view of the world, basically brainwashing them and peta sees nothing wrong with this like MS Ingrid newkirk the founder and ceo of PETA you and your organization needs to understand you're traumatizing kids!!! And what for them to join your cause?. That's not the way to do it. It's like those christian conversion schools. They are horrible and should be illegal, forcing someone against their will to do something because you think it's the correct choice when in reality it's not and should never be an option. What's the point of gathering this much attention when it's all negative?. As part of the animal rights movement community there are so many companies that peta can look at and follow their ways such as ASPCA a company that actually helps homeless animals and makes a change about it by finding them new homes instead of killing them, while peta For one they're advertisement consist of repetitive shock value which include graphic, violent, disturbing pictures and videos of animals being brutally abused they do this to make you want to stand up for animal rights when in reality all it does is makes people look at peta as the bad ones for promoting it i mean peta was already exposed in the past before for killing innocent dogs they literally had a campaign where they would go out and steal peoples dogs to euthanize them. In 2014 two peta representatives stoled a family's chihuahua dog and euthanized it for no apparent reason other than thinking something was wrong with it but that still gives them no right to just kidnap a dog and kill it does it? In petas eyes they think they're doing the right thing and freeing the animals from the "Miserable" lives they live. An ex peta employee came out as a whistleblower [2] and exposed the sad truth of peta she explained how she was encouraged by the founder and president of peta Ingrid newkirk to steal and kill pets to falsify records she explains how PETA performs the heartbreaking task of euthanizing animals who are unwanted for one reason or another: because they are aggressive, sick, hurt, elderly, or at death's door and because no good homes exist for them. But do you guys see the hypocrisy here? Peta's main goal is to SAVE animals and what are they doing ? the complete opposite, they're literally doing what they advertise against Animal cruelty bunch of Imposters the sad part is that people trusted them and gave them animals hoping for them to find a new home but instead they were handing the dogs off to die without knowing. I know you guys have heard of the issue I'm addressing today because I have not been the first person to speak out against petas wrongdoings and i say there has to be more people supporting this movement against peta and making animal rights movements normalized there's a website dedicated to bringing down peta and exposing them for the monsters that they truly are “ In the last 20 years, PETA has killed at least 40,854 dogs and cats, including healthy puppies and kittens” www.whypetaeuthanizes.org in the websites there's thousands of documented and testimonial evidence that supports my argument today against them.
