Chapter 1: INTRODUCTION

Manga is a style of Japanese comic books and graphic novels that is typically aimed at adults as well as children. Anime is the Japanese term for animation however outside of Japan anime is referred to as the animation adapted from a popular manga. Anime has been a part of my childhood for as long as I can remember thanks to Cartoon Network. A decade and some years later and I still very much enjoy watching anime now and I've also taken a huge interest in reading manga now.

Chapter 2: Anime

Anime is important to me because of the connections I've made with it since I was a kid. I grew up watching anime and made so many friends with people I've met in clubs throughout middle school and high school who also have enjoyed watching anime. My younger and older sisters love anime as well so we love talking about anime and coming up with theories, I've also made so many online friends with people on twitter who love anime as well. Anime is my discourse community with all my friends and family where we can share our love for anime. Another reason why anime is important to me is that I've never felt left out for watching it even though I had friends who never watched anime they didn't point that out to make me feel weird, although back then boys always thought that girls couldn't watch anime. After all, it was a "boys thing" but it never bothered me. Anime has also inspired my younger sister to take an interest in drawing because it helped make her realize that drawing is something that she loves to do.
