My first reaction when I first heard about the repurposing project was thinking that it was a nice idea. WE took something that we already created and made it into something new. We had all the information that we already needed, all we had to do was organize it and add visual aids. The ideas I had first started to form when I picked my topic. When I thought about historical fiction I thought about taking an important part of my paper and adding visual aids to help the readers understand.

I knew I wanted to use examples in tv and movies like “The Grates Show Men” and “Downton Abbey” because I know that it would be very relatable to my audience. My original plan was to have a blue background with an information slide then a slide with examples in tv and/or movies. I also had the title page with few pictures then in the final product. Yes all my enital plans were workable with the creation of my website.

Further reviewing I noticed small changes that I could make to make the website better. I ended up altering the amount of examples I had in one slide. At the beginning I had 3 examples on a slide but later changed it to 2. It looked more aesthetically pleasing and gave me more room to add a description and/ or trailer for each example I used. Something that stayed the same was the font style of my slides, I kept it because it was easy to read and looked pleasing to the eye.

I felt pretty good about the feedback I received from the first peer review. There was one suggestion that I like so much that I include it in the design of my website. The suggestion said to change the background to look like it was on old parchment paper because it gives the website a more historical feeling. The second peer review was good too. I did add a few more slides just to make sure I went into enough depth about the subject of my topic. I think that the reviews helped me make my work better than it originally was. I did reach my initial goal which was to give information about historical fiction with examples that were relatable to the common reader. The elements of change that needs to happen was the background and figuring out how to add the links in my home page.

I learned that I have seen more historical fiction examples than I originally thought. I found this funny because I really had to think about what examples I would use and I even had some to spare. Something I would do differently about this project is include a trailer for the tv or anime examples as I did for the movies. Overall the creative process that I experienced was a good I started out with something ok and ended up with something I am really proud of.
