Process Essay

When I first read the term "repurposing" , I immediately thought that I would struggle to complete the objective that was given. But, when I understood what it means and what I have to do, I knew that it would be fun to work on and create something I enjoy and I have a considerable amount of knowledge about. I had so many plans for my website at the beginning like the background images, it was the hardest thing to decide as I have to choose an image related to my topic and also that would let the writing be clear. I tried to do everything I planned on the website and at the same time, write it as simple and descriptive as I can so the reader can understand what I am talking about and what it means.

I showed the website to some of my friends and family, and I guess it wasn't that bad from the reviews I got from them, so I can say that my initial plans worked. One of the common negative comments on the website was that there was no audio at all and they told me that if I put the audio, it would help the readers understand the topic better. I was not sure if the audio will make it better or not and also I didn't know which audio related to soccer that would be easily understood by the reader, so I figured instead of putting it and losing the interest of the reader, not to put it at all , but I guess that was the wrong decision. If I was to re-do it, I would insert understandable audio that explains the purpose of soccer in our world so the reader can easily understand it.

I noticed many things about myself working on this project. Usually, I finish my essays and projects without enjoying it that much as it's just writing. But working on a website and searching for images, information and designs that would attract the readers, made me enjoy my time doing the website,took my time on it and for the first time, not rushing my projects. I literally didn't want to finish it. I would do many things differently the next time as I now know from the review, what most people are interested in when visiting a website.
