The first thing that would pop into my head when I thought out repurposing was to change or make better for the assignments I've done. My first reactions were thinking about how to make it better by changing the way the topic is being used towards the audience. When I was creating the website, I had to think and brainstorm about how I wanted it to look. I had a template in my head and I knew how it was supposed to look like with the images and text in a certain place. My initial plans for the website would be filling it with images of the games that are popular nowadays and providing information about the topic. I wanted the homepage of the website to be filled with images and the other pages to be talking about video games and a picture. I wanted a slide to contain information about each topic of the genre essay I wrote about. After being close to the end of the project, all of my plans have been done but I feel like I could do a lot more by providing more details for each topic. I had to alter my website by adding and explaining more about video games by mentioning topics that aren't something you would think of when you think of video games. I had to add a slide that showed the citations of the work that I used when making the website. The thing that stayed the same was the homepage and some slides because it was already fine. After getting feedback from my peer reviewers, I thought that it was reasonable that it was not the best and that I should further work on the website. The changes I had made was the same as what I made before which was to add more slides about the topic and create a slide that shows the citations. There was another slide I added that explained my inspiration about the topic and what kind of audiences I am targeting. I did not get a second peer review because none of my partners from the new group have sent me their website. After sending in my website, I didn't get any reviews about my website. Most of my goals have been reached for my initial goals. Some didn't work because of how I didn't think it would fit into the theme of the website. I didn't learn much from the process but I do know that I have an understanding of how to create and organize a "website". If I were to do the whole project over again, I would most likely change the whole website design and the theme of the whole website. I would add more details to the slides and change where the images would be placed.
