Unit 3 Writing Assignment: Process Essay Brainstorm Worksheet

When the professor first introduced the idea about “repurposing” our previous writing assignments, my initial reaction was wondering how we would go about doing that. I was not sure at first if I knew what to do for it or which essay to choose for this project. The mode of repurposing began to “gel” and begin to take concrete form in my mind after I decided which essay to write about. That is when I started to think about which format to use for the site and how I wanted it to look.

I wasn't sure what my initial plan was going to be when I heard that we could use google slide. Once I realized I could use other forms to recreate the essay, I knew I was going to use Tumblr; I am somewhat comfortable with that platform and knew I would be able to create something I was confident in submitting. Now that I'm close to the end of the project, some of my initial plans were workable. As I started getting into creating the site, there were more things I wanted to add but did not work out, like visible links to my friends' works that I had interviewed.

I had to alter the background after receiving feedback that the website was too plain. It was also unclear where some of the information was that people had thought was missing so I made a post on the homepage as to where they could find it. The content of my website (the interviews) had stayed the same as well as the pictures I had made for each interview pages. The feedback I got back from my first peer review did not really give me enough feedback to make drastic changes or changes to things that would have affected my grade. The second round of peer reviews was a lot more helpful. I was able to see what was clear on my site and what wasn't which were things that would play a factor in my final grade. I made the changes I felt were necessary in response to the feedback I had received from my peers to make it more clear where the links were on the website so that they could access the answers to the last set of questions on the peer review round two sheet.

I feel as though I was able to reach a lot of my initial goals for the website. The things that did not work out for me on my website were little things like adding links within the text's or interviews. I think this was because of the html I used for the site. Through the process of this project, I learned that even though I may not be creative as a writer, I do enjoy being creative in other aspects. Creating the website was enjoyable since I already had all the content for it. If I were to do the project all over again I would either try out doing my other essay just to see how I would be able to make that work and see what other visually pleasing ways I could make that essay enjoyable. I would also most likely choose a different theme (html) for the website, one that allows me to add links within the pages like I had wanted.
