

Final reflection first draft

To start this reflection I wanted to express that this semester felt like it has supported me a lot in my writing, I feel that it has given me an excellent way of practicing and to be capable of stretching my knowledge on how to write in a more suitable way. I noticed that my way of writing has grown into a more precise and expressly way when it comes to essays etc., I can see myself taking more time into thinking what suits and what doesn't on an essay because since the start of the semester I was a more standard writer meaning that it just felt like another paper to read from the many others or at least that's what I believe. I do consider that from the many learnings that I have collected from this past months on this semester the one that has stood out the most was in providing evidence in a more suitable or fitting way meaning that I feel like I have more control into what I'm trying to communicate on a paper. On the other hand as a reader I believe that I have also improved into taking things slowly, before I used to rush my readings and get stuck at something that confuses me but thanks to the many papers and classmates paper that I was able to get my hands on I realize that I understand them more deeply, for example on the first papers on U1 I had plain ideas of writings that I completed leaving me into struggling with my writing assignments but as the time went on I was more focused and ready into finishing my future assignments but in addition to that when the drafts that I needed to submit were different type of genres in writing and reading to get my answers my thinking changed in a lot of ways by organizing patterns that helped me arrange what I had say and when they say it for example the U1 and U2 writing, they were different ideas and I had to execute them differently and equally at the same time. Looking back at this papers and my classmates paper when I had to review them for some assignments it kind of felt difficult in a way since I believe all writers are different and the way they allowed phrases out of their mind to a paper is absolutely distinct, I had fun in some and I struggled with others. Another thing that I really struggled with was in U2, when we were assigned to provide a unique idea of why the problems that each of us established were an actual problem was kind of difficult for me. I really didn't know how to proof or where to start, I had a lot of ideas but executing them on a writing was exceptionally challenging due to the limited evidence I had: "Colleges are getting expensive" and the explanation that I first had circled around the fact that "college is important" , "education and college diploma are keys to success" when in reality it really isn't (at all.) I had to research and research a lot to come with a valid determination for delivering a more powerful evidence but I ended up expecting this struggle, I wanted to force myself as a writer and as a reader since I'm beginning to like reading, I wanted to expand my knowledge on that, I wanted to improve the way that I conclude my evidence and don't feel like I'm doing a plain lazy writing so far I have enjoyed the semester and I would gladly recommend students take this course (specifically this class) for how incredibly helpful it was. (And how nice the professor is.)
