How COVID changed my education

It was a sunny day on Thursday, March 12, 2020. I woke up, got ready, and ate a bacon egg and cheese sandwich on my way to school. It was a typical school day for me until I heard about the virus that has been spreading across the globe. This was the event that transformed the way I viewed school. COVID was a big adjustment for everyone. It will strengthen the way I will do my work in college. I say this because I noticed how much I've been able to focus on my work. I can manage my time to fit my schedule as well as complete assignments at any time.

When I first started to do remote learning in high school, I struggled because there were a lot of assignments that had to be done at the end of each class. A month before COVID, I had been considering not going to school anymore. My anxiety was terrible and I felt like I've been memorizing things just to get the work done instead of learning. I wasn't sure if I should even go to college because I felt like it wasn't worth the stress that I was going through. I then thought about what my life would be like if I didn't go to college. If I didn't go to college I wouldn't have better job opportunities for myself and I wouldn't have a career that I'll love to do. COVID has taught me to focus on my work and do what's best for myself. I know that even through the toughest times, we still manage to push forward and do whatever we can to become successful.

COVID molded me to become more flexible with my online courses. I am now able to learn everything at my own pace. I am also able to work independently which is something that I prefer doing. I can say that COVID was an event that has changed the way I learned drastically. I feel more confident in my work and I have nothing that can stop me from achieving my goals.
