

New York Times

Racial Injustice In Housing In New York City

November 24th 2020

The most important part I learned in unit 2 was that people of color have been facing inequality for years. Especially in New York City. "New York is one of the most segregated cities in the country when it comes to housing. Access to housing remains unequal in New York City for over two decades"

Wackstein, Nancy. "High Rents Supplant Racism in Segregating Neighborhoods." EBSCOhost.

web.b.ebscohost.com

Throughout my research I have come across four sources. These four sources included articles and interviews that will help readers understand that most New Yorkers have faced poor treatment in the city when it comes to housing. These sources show other people's perspectives that will help other readers who are facing the same challenges, make them feel not alone. There hasn't been any significant changes that could help change the city and give better housing to people with lower income. Many feel that the city keeps Hispanic people and African Americans away from white people and certain neighborhoods. The audience that could best relate is people of color. That includes African American and Hispanic households.

"They have faced injustice for years since they have no other choice but to live in projects with limited resources and poor living conditions."

Argeros, Grigoris "Housing Turnover and the Persistence of Racial/Ethnic Segregation in New York City" 05. High and persistent residential segregation of Blacks and Whites in NYC has put Black women at a clear and significant ecological disadvantage compared to White women regardless of the borough where they lived when they gave birth to their infant. This study found that, when compared to White women, Black women in New York City are at a vast disadvantage regardless of income."

Jaffee, Kim D. "Racial Differences in Neighborhood Disadvantage Among Childbearing Women in New York City." Journal of Human Behavior in the Social Environment. 2003. Vol. 7 Issue 3/4, p59-77

What I have learned is good for the audience to know about this so they can also help use their voice on a platform and help create change. Change can help future generations have a better life and live in a better environment. Readers can now take this time and change that. It's never too late for change and changing the city for the better.