Trains reach safety of West

The refugees, fleeing the atrocities of a civil war that has ravaged Syria, and escaping strife in Iraq, Afghanistan and Africa, were granted safe passage into Austria and Germany after a deal Friday that suspended European Union rules requiring them to be registered and processed in their first country of arrival.

German Interior Minister Thomas de Maiziere warned Sunday that the decision was a one-time exception and that the country's "big willingness to help, which Germany has shown in the last weeks and months, should not be overstretched."

In the U.S., aid groups pushed the government to let more refugees cross the Atlantic to help reduce the growing crisis in Europe.

"You have 4 million Syrians living on borders of Syria, as refugees," said Lucy Carrigan of the International Rescue Committee. "To be able to alleviate some of the pressure on those countries, the United States, which has historically been a leader . . . needs to lead and do much more."

The U.S. has resettled about 1,500 Syrian refugees and has promised to help about 8,000.

"It's not even close to being enough," Carrigan said.

British Prime Minister David Cameron said his country would expand its refugee program in the coming days.

But not everyone agreed with Pope Francis' message Sunday.

In Israel, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu rejected the idea of accepting refugees.

"Israel is not indifferent to the human tragedy of the refugees from Syria and Africa," he said at a cabinet meeting in Jerusalem. "But Israel is a small country, a very small country, that lacks demographic and geographic depth; therefore, we must control our borders against illegal migrants and terrorism." With News Wire Services

Bx. pastor a witness to horror

BY ERIN DURKIN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

BRONX PASTOR William Devlin has seen a slew of Syrians streaming over the border into Turkey, whose ailments range from missing eyes to amputated limbs – but they all have one thing in common.

“Everybody I’ve seen – and I’ve seen over a hundred people in the last four days – everyone has had members of their family killed,” he said Sunday. “People are leaving with just the clothes on their back. They’re leaving everything behind.”

Devlin, co-pastor of Infinity Bible Church in the South Bronx, spoke to the Daily News from a medical clinic in the Turkish town of Reyhanli near the Syrian border, where he’s aiding arriving refugees.

Devlin, who is also a registered nurse, came bearing antibiotics from the U.S., as well as
