In class assignment 1

Yesterday was the 16th anniversary of the 9/11 attacks in NYC. This is a tragic story and attack that will be remembered throughout time. During this attack 2996 people died. This of course an important day in our calendars. Today is Election Day in NYC. Many people might feel that they don't even need to vote and because their vote does not matter. While in reality it might not play a big role in the outcome of the elections, but what is more important is the fact that no matter who wins if one was not registered to vote they can't even complain or expect anything from the government. Elections could be life changing too many, because of the power and decisions the elected takes. Elections could be for the better but could also bring out a worse future instead. Tomorrow I am supposed to attend class where I have homework due.

In all three of these events one should always focus on doing their homework as school could be life changing for everyone. The primary thing for me should be doing the homework and being prepared for each class as that could be life changing for me as well as for others that are in need of that profession. It diplomats and educated people who make the bigger change in this world. By getting a college degree ones word would have a bigger impact. If everyone makes such decisions of school being primary goal the world would be a better advanced place. With that being said attack like 9/11 could be avoided. Bad outcomes of elections would also be avoided as we would have better electors as well as less need of help for government.
