

Zayd Sanders
Assignment #3

The attire for the workplace is pretty informal. The Vice President wears jeans and sneakers, and that was every time I saw him. The day I was interviewed the art director had a t-shirt on with jeans and sneakers. I have never seen him in a more formal outfit. My supervisor usually wears plaid button down shirts and jeans. I myself wear jeans, sneakers, button down shirts (mainly plaid), and Henley long sleeve shirts. We all sit at desks and they are blocked off by cabinets. They aren't really cubicles.

The typical work day is every person getting small pieces of projects done. I've worked on audio edits for animatics and animations for the next person to animate a lip sync correlated to the audio. When I or anyone is finished or wants to show progress with work, we upload the file(s) to the server for anyone to have access to it without them having to walk all the way over to your computer. We all contact each other through Microsoft Outlook. So every day that program needs to be opened and remain open because someone might get emails telling them what they might have to do or upload.

There is an hour lunch break and people usually take it from 12pm- to around 2pm. I usually like taking a later lunch because by the time I finish there isn't too much time after that for the work day. People usually eat lunch at their desks, but the other interns and I usually go to one of the soundproof rooms with the sliding glass doors and eat there. There are tons of events and parties as well. Last Thursday there was a birthday event for people who have birthdays in April. The VP's birthday was one of the birthdays so we had a Japanese theme since he's from Japan.
